Keefe Had Been "Bending the Crab" on a Bowery Fire-Escape. David Keefe, a bricklayer, forty-two years old and single, was found in the rear court-yard of the Uncle Sam House, 276 Bowery, this morning with a frac-tured skull. Keefe had been lodging at the house four months.

Keefe's room was on the third floor, in the rear. Just off his room there is a fire escape. At 5 o'clock this morning Joseph Yello, who lives in an Elizabeth street tenement-house, back of the hotel, was surprised to find Keefe on the fire escape doing what in acrobatic circles is known as "bending the crab."

Yello watched the man for a few minutes, then went into another room to eat his breakfast. Half an hour later, when he again looked from the window, Keefe was not on the fire scape, but looking into the yard, Yello saw him lying apparently unconscious on the bricks. He went around to the hotel and notified the proprietor.

Policeman Callahan was called, and the surgeon said his skull was fractured. He had evidently failen from the fire escape.

The Baltimores are good ball players, but some of their tactics on the field could just as well be dispensed with. Loud and vigorous coaching may be all right, but for men to get up on the line and yell: "Well! well!! Bill, it's easy money, old sport. He (the opposing pitcher) is just as bad as the other one," and other choice expressions, is not calculated to make the game attractive—that is, attractive to the class of people whose patronage is desirable. Whatever else may be said of the New Yorks, they generally conduct themselves in a becoming manner, and they are not one whit lower down in the percentage figures for so doing.

YALE MEDICAL SCHOOL.

A College on Which the Sick and Feeble Heap Their Blessings.

Yale has good reason to be proud that America's greatest physician was one of her first graduates in medicine.

Prof. Edward E. Phells, M. D., LL D., to whom it has been well said the world owes longer life and more freedom from sickness than to any other man or school of men, had studied with Prof. Nathan Smith, of New Haven, and graduated in medicine at Yale only a few years before he began to be known as one of the most remarkable men in his profession.

In maturer years, after his researches abroad, his brilliant professorship at Dartmouth and his wonderful discovery of what has come to be known as Palme's celery compound, the remely that in this spring season is in greater demand than any other medicine in the world-in his maturer years. Prof. Phelps often capressed his higher times of the value of the schooled y training be had received. His early it structors were men of even temper; healthy, strong, clear-brained, bard-working.

Our school teachers to-day are every now and then accused by prants of being irritable and even unjust toward their pupils.
